Conspiracy, the red-flag word in the hearing of the charges against former Detective John R. Kellett before the civil service commission, was heard again this morning soon after the hearing was resumed with Kong Eung Do, the Korean prisoner on the stand to finish his testimony.

From 9:30 until noon the commission was in session, the greater part of the time with the Korean occupying the witness chair, but the verbal encounter between E. C. Peters, the attorney for Kellett, and Deputy Attorney-general Smith, representing the sheriff in the hearing, which occurred at the suggestion of conspiracy from Peters, was about the only incident to break the monotony of the morning session.

But with Detective John Woo on the stand this afternoon to corroborate the testimony of his countryman, Kong, promise to give that the session will not lack interest. Woo took the stand a few minutes before 12 o'clock, and on direct examination he corroborated what Kong had said concerning the beatings Kong alleges he received from Kellett with remarkable exactitude, notwithstanding that some of the events testified to occurred as far back as four years.

Kong, the last of the four men who have charged Kellett with brutality, has finished his testimony. On cross-examination this morning he experienced a difficult time. So many times was it made to appear that his statements made on direct examination were at radical variance with those made during cross-examination that Peters rose once during the hearing and declared that the witness was not testifying truthfully.

The only witness to corroborate Kong is the detective, Woo, who is credited with working up the brutality charges against Kellett; and who acted as the interpreter when Kong was brought before Smith to give an account of the alleged beatings.

It was while Kong was on the witness stand, and when it was brought out that Woo had acted as interpreter, that the encounter between Peters and Smith took place. Intimations of a conspiracy, an arrangement between witnesses to make their testimony agree in essential parts, were made before Peters closed his part of the argument.

Kong Takes Stand.
Not long after Kong Eung Do took the stand, the argument between Peters and Smith began, with the word conspiracy as the pivotal point. It was lead up to with these questions put to the Korean by Peters:

Q. How is it that on direct examination you tell one story and on cross-examination you tell another?

A. I say the same both times.

Q. Are you going to tell the same story as Mr. Woo?

Smith objected to this question, which marked the opening of their encounter, an encounter that finally ended when the commission overruled the objection.

"You are not trying to prove conspiracy now, are you?" asked Chairman Wirtz of Peters.

"There is this about it," replied the lawyer, rising to answer the commission and defend his question. "The commission wants to bear in mind that conspiracy cannot be proved by overt acts. But if you find that two witnesses have been constantly talking together, or if you find that one witness is talking with the interpreter of another, it is material for the commission to know—not to prove conspiracy, but to show that they are getting together to fix up their testimony. Now the testimony of this witness is that on eight occasions he has been beaten. When he tells his story on direct examination it differs radically from the story he now tells on cross-examination. In other words, it shifts about so that the two different stories he tells cannot be reconciled. Now Detective Woo is the man he has talked to. As far as this man Woo is concerned, his position is obvious—he is the principal witness in the Robinson case, in the Joseph case and now he is the sole corroborating witness!"

After the Facts.
"We are anxious to get at the facts; and we are perfectly frank to say that the facts as testified by this man are not correct. It is a remarkable state of affairs if by any possibility what this man says is true—remarkable in the face of the statementBISHOP BRENT RETURNING TO PHILIPPINES

At the head of the Episcopal church in the Philippines, Right Rev. Bishop Charles H. Brent, now returning to the islands as a passenger in the Japanese liner Chiyu Maru after six months spent in the United States, was greeted upon his arrival at Honolulu today by Right Rev. Henry Bond Restarick of this city.

Bishop Brent is recognized as a power in the religious work throughout the Philippines. He is often referred to as the friend of the American soldier and while away on his mainland mission Bishop Brent lifted his voice in defense of the shedding of blood in the attempt to subjugate the savage and ferocious Moro in the southern Philippines.

Without attempting to justify it, he declared that for anything the soldier may have done he has had more than enough provocation.

Bishop Brent has dealt particularly with the difficulties of the struggle which the American church has now, for the first time, engaged in with the Mohammedan faith, which he characterized as a mighty and growing religion with an effective propaganda. He expressed pleasure at the success which had attended the efforts of the Episcopal church to establish a hospital in Southern Mindanao, and declared that at present the only effective missionary work should be through practical Christian philanthropy, and not through preaching.

The first thing to do, he said, is to show the Moros that the Americans are not merely a race of warriors, but actually mean them well. When that lesson is thoroughly taught he thinks the Moros will become pacific. Otherwise, he said, these people are born fighters, and will never yield.

coming from Woo that when he, Woo, struck a man at the police station, McDuffie directed him to 'cut it out.' "These charges, the commission must know, of brutality against Kellett were not made at the time he was suspended, but got together just before he was summarily discharged.

"It is ridiculous to think that this man has not talked with Woo—Woo, who put the questions to him before Mr. Smith. Woo, who heard the answers as they were given in Korean. Woo heard the questions and answers, and knows now just what Kong is ready to say. That is why I want to know from this witness if he knows whether or not Woo is going to tell the same story he tells. It is this same Woo, mind you, who testified here before us that he saw Kellett grab the negro Joseph by the throat, as he, Woo, stood on the top step of the detective department and Kellett and the negro were on the sidewalk! "We haven't any ordinary case here where disinterested persons come to testify."

Smith interrupted with an objection. "I am free to state," he began, "that I have used Woo as an interpreter in all Korean cases. But this is a matter which should not be taken up now. We are wasting time."

"No," broke in Peters, again taking the floor. "We are not wasting time. The argument of counsel that this man has told so many stories so many different days that it would be impossible for Woo to corroborate him is an awful boomerang."

The commission ruled in favor of the question; the witness answered that he did not know what Woo would testify.

Near the close of the testimony of Kong, it was brought out that one of the beatings the Korean said he received from Kellett occurred more than four years ago. The point of the effect of the statute of limitations came up, but the commission decided to hear all the evidence available to decide for themselves what value or weight they would attach to it.

Before the close of the afternoon session at 4 o'clock the commission expects to reach the charges of misappropriation of evidence money.

Important rulings on the new income tax law have been received by the Bank of Hawaii and are given below. These rulings are in addition to the previous explanation sent out to Collector Cottrell.

To Collectors of Internal Revenue:
Banks, bankers, trust companies, and other banking institutions receiving deposits of money, are not required under the treasury regulations (part 2), approved October 31, 1913, to withhold at the source the normal income tax of 1 per cent on the interest paid, or accrued or accruing to depositors, whether on open accounts or on certificates of deposit; but all such interest, whether paid, or accrued and not paid, must be included in his tax return by the person or persons entitled to receive such interest, whether on open account or on the certificate of deposit.W. Interest upon Obligations of the United States or its Possessions, or of any State, County, City or any other Political Subdivision thereof, is not Subject to Income Tax.Washington, D. C., Nov. 6, 1913.
To Collectors of Internal Revenue:
It has been called to the attention of this office that banks in certain sections are refusing to pay coupons for interest on bonds of states, counties, cities, or other political subdivisions of the United States, when such coupons are not accompanied by certificates of ownership, without deducting the normal income tax of 1 per cent, which the law and the regulations of this department require shall be deducted at the source in paying the interest on bonds of corporations, joint stock companies, or associations and insurance companies.

Please inform all parties interested, giving the information wide publicity, that the income derived from the interest upon the obligations of a state, county, city, or any other political subdivision thereof, and upon the obligations of the United States or its possessions, is not subject to the income tax, and a certificate of ownership in connection with the coupons or registered interest orders for such interest will not be required.

The interest coupons should clearly show on their face whether they are issued by the United States or any political subdivision thereof. If, however, they do not clearly show this, then of course, an ownership certificate should be required.

Respectfully,

Some Reason.

Smith had just been operated upon for appendicitis. During his period of convalescence he became quite chummy with the two other patients who shared the ward with him. "How are you feeling, boys?" said Smith one morning to them. "Oh, we are all right," they both answered together, "considering that we had to undergo two operations." "Why, how was that?" questioned Smith, in an agitated voice. "Because the doctor assigned to this ward is an idiot. In collecting his instruments after the operation he missed a needle and scissors. The former he found in me, said the latter in my friend here on the right. You see now the reason for the two operations." Just then the surgeon put his head in the door and asked: "Has any one seen my silk hat?" Smith faints.

When one is presented with a box of Handkerchiefs, or a pair of Gloves, or a Veil, or a Mantilla, or perhaps some dainty piece of Lingerie, it always adds to the value of the gift and to the pleasure of the recipient to find enclosed a package of Sachet Powder.

This little touch of refinement, this proof of appreciative thought, lifts the gift out of the commonplace and puts it on a higher plane: it adds that little bit of intimacy the recipient so well likes.

(And, of course, Sachet Powder is exceptionally good as a gift by itself, and is always appreciated.)
